The cranial cavity was measured by Morton in 623 instances, the heads being derived from many nations. The largest was that of a German, and measured 114 cubic inches. The smallest, that of an Australian, measured only 58 cubic inches. The cranial capacity of Daniel Webster amounted to 122 inches, and ranks among the largest ascertained; but Dr. T. G. Richardson, in his work on Anatomy, gives the measurement of the head of a German baker in the cabinet of the University of Louisville, the capacity of which was 125.77 cubic inches, thus exceeding by more than three inches the heads of Cuvier and Webster in size. It would be easy to multiply similar instances going to show how uncertain is the size of the head as an index of intellectual power.

A MADAME BRES lately passed her first examination for the Doctorate of Medicine in Paris, and the Secretary of the Faculty appended the following particulars to her certificate: "Madame Brès, married, and the mother of two children, has not taken to the study of medicine as a pastime, nor from scientific vanity. She practises all the duties of the profession. During the two sieges which Paris has so lately borne, she never quitted the bedside of the wounded. The rain of honorary distinctions poured upon the ambulances passed by without falling upon her; the devotion natural to woman needing neither stimulus nor flattery."

THE following medical declaration concerning alcohol has been published in the National Temperance Advocate, over the signatures of Drs. E. Delafield, Willard Parker, Alonzo Clark, E. R. Peaslee, C. R. Agnew, Stephen Smith, A. C. Post, Elisha Harris, E. Eliot, Stephen Rogers, Andrew H. Smith, J. R. Leaming, and other New York physicians:

"In view of the alarming prevalence and ill effects of intemperance, with which none are so familiar as members of the medical profession, and which have called forth from eminent English physicians the voice of warning to the people of Great Britain concerning the use of alcoholic beverages, we, the undersigned members of the medical profession of New York and vicinity, unite in the declaration that we believe alcohol should be classed with other powerful drugs; that when prescribed medicinally it should be with conscientious caution and a sense of grave responsibility.

"We are of the opinion that the use of alcoholic liquors as a beverage is productive of a large amount of physical disease; that it entails diseased appetite upon offspring, and that it is the cause of a large percentage of the crime and pauperism of our cities and country.

"We would welcome any judicious and effective legislation—State and national—which should seek to confine the traffic in alcohol to the legitimate purposes of medical and other sciences, art, and mechanism."

As colds are prevalent at this season, the Danbury News furnishes its readers with the particulars of a method adopted by a citizen of that place, to get rid of one of "He boiled those troublesome affections: a little boneset and hoarhound together, and drank freely of the tea before going to bed. The next day he took five pills, put one kind of plaster on his breast, another under his arms, and still another on his back. Under advice from an experienced old lady he took all these off with an oyster knife in the afternoon, and slapped on a mustard paste instead. His mother put some onion drafts on his feet and gave him a lump of tar to swallow. Then he put some hot bricks to his feet, and went to bed. Next morning another old lady came in with bottle of goose oil, and gave him a dose of it in a quill, and an aunt arrived about the same time from Bethel, with a bundle of sweet fern which she made into a tea, and gave him every half hour until noon, when he took a big dose of salts. After dinner, his wife, who had seen a fine old lady of great experience in doctoring, on Franklin street, gave him two pills of her make, about the size of an English walnut and of a similar shape, and two tablespoonfuls of homemade balsam to keep them down. Then he took a half pint of hot rum at the suggestion of an old sea captain in the next house, and steamed his legs with an alcohol bath. At this crisis, two of the neighbors arrived, who saw at once that his blood was out of order, and gave him a half gallon of spearmint tea and a big dose of castor oil. Before going to bed he took eight of a new kind of pill. wrapped about his neck a flannel soaked in hot vinegar and salt, and had feathers burned on a shovel in his room. He is now thoroughly cured, and full of gratitude."

I don't believe the chambers of the Inquisition ever presented a more alarming array of implements for extracting a confession, than our young doctor's office did of instruments to make nature tell what was the matter with a poor body.

There were Ophthalmoscopes and Rhinoscopes and Otoscopes and Laryngoscopes, and Stethoscopes; and Thermometers and Spirometers and Dynamometers and Sphygmometers and Pleximeters; and Probes and Probangs, and all sorts of frightful inquisitive exploring contrivances; and scales to weigh you in, and tests, and balances, and pumps, and electro-magnets and magneto-electric machines; in short, apparatus for doing everything but turn you inside out.

Dr. Benjamin set me down before his one window, and began looking at me with such a superhuman air of sagacity, that I felt like one of those open-breasted clocks which make no secret of their inside arrangements, and almost thought he could see through me, as one sees through a shrimp or jelly-fish.

First, he looked at the place inculpated, which had a sort of greenish-brown color, with his naked eye, with much corrugation of forehead and fearful concentration of attention; then through a pocket-glass which he carried. Then he drew back a space, for a perspective view. Then he made me put out my tongue, and laid a slip of blue paper on it, which turned red and scared me a little. Next he took my wrist; but instead of counting my pulse in the old-fashioned way, he fastened a machine to it that marked all the beats on a sheet of paper — for all the world like a scale of the heights of mountains, say from Mount Tom up to Chimborazo, and then down again, and so on.

In the mean time he asked me all sorts of quessays my authority, 'put herself to the inspection of the pharmacy, handling everything within her reach, according to a custom too general among foreigners.' At last she came to the arsenic paste, and thinking she had discovered some Pâte de Guimauve, proceeded to enjoy herself. By good chance, the pharmacien noticed her just in time to prevent her from swallowing the poison, and her death was thereby averted. But with a comic solemnity, he relates how she refused to be frightened at her narrow escape, the words acide arsénieux having apparently no terrors for her. Probably she failed to understand him. Any way, he says, she left the shop with an evident grudge against the proprietor, for she remarked that in the druggists shops in America pastilles and bonbons were invariably laid out for the delectation of the customers."

Persine Wine. — In reply to questions from several correspondents, suggested by the article on "Pepsine Wine in Feeding Infants," which appeared in the Journal for December, 1872, we would state that Messrs. Billings, Clapp, & Co., chemists, of this city, prepare Pepsine Wine from pure and fresh materials. It has long been in use here, and has been very favorably spoken of by physicians.

Animal charcoal or bone-black, according to Eulenberg and Wohl, is a superior antidote to the poisonous effects of phosphorus. A number of experiments warrant the belief that it is far more efficacious than the oil of turpentine, which, although valuable for the purpose, frequently produces severe headaches. The bone-black is administered in the form of pills made with gum tragacanth or other mucilaginous substance.

Specialities.—Dr. Robert Barnes says, "I have recently been honored by a visit from a lady of typical modern intelligence, who consulted me about a fibroid tumor of the uterus; and, lest I should stray beyond my business, she was careful to tell me that Dr. Brown-Séquard had charge of her nervous system; that Dr. Williams attended to her lungs; that her abdominal organs were intrusted to Sir William Gull; that Mr. Spencer Wells looked after her rectum; and that Dr. Walshe had her heart. If some adventurous doctor should determine to start a new speciality, and open an Zura institution for the treatment of diseases of the umbilieus, -the only region which, as my colleague, Mr. Simon, says is unappropriated, I think I can promise him more than one patient,"-London Lancet.
